

MOBILE JOURNALISM

Digital Media Series

What Is This About?

Technology is regularly changing our approach to newsgathering. For media practitioners, mobile journalism is a non-threatening digital storytelling toolkit to create a content stream and a bridge to transition audience between screens and breaking news, as well as, web TV platforms. Smartphones are being used to provide content that requires a quick turnaround for websites and for when traditional crews may not be available. They are also being used to edit stories, file transfer back to stations and even provide live broadcasts in difficult situations.

The convergence of mobile technologies has also resulted in unprecedented opportunities for citizens at grassroots levels to create and publish their voice on a global stage. With just a smartphone, some multimedia, camera, writing, editing and publishing skills, anyone is ready to “mojo” anywhere there is connectivity. User generated stories (USG) empower citizens with digital skills that transform their alternative voice into a more mainstream form.

Hence, this course will expose you to the various approaches in making better use of your mobile phone to capture and edit stories.

Daniel Anthony
Broadcast Journalist, KiniTV

A journalist and newscaster, Daniel began his career with KiniTV as an intern in 2013. Starting his journey as a video editor, he found a place in the newsroom digging beneath the surface of what seems like a simple story. He works closely with the KiniTV Head of Content and experienced journalist Tham Seen Hau to manage the intricate ways of putting together what looks like arbitrary data such as electoral voter patterns, suspicious cash flow and fallacies of finance to see the bigger picture.

Course Facilitator

Prasad Michael
Editorial, KiniTV

In 2011, Prasad joined Malaysiakini, inspired to pursue a career in journalism. In 2012, he became the social media editor of Malaysiakini, making him largely responsible for pumping life into Malaysiakini's Facebook pages and pioneering the use of editorial graphics in social media. He is currently the Assistant Producer of KiniTV.

Course Facilitator
